My Life as a Blacksmith

Name: Rhett Bertel, nickname "Bertie"

Occupation: Blacksmith

Location: Small home close to the main road headed into the city of Solbur. About an hours walk from the entrance to the city.

Appearance: Upon meeting, Bertie, you will see a man standing a little over six foot tall. A body built to hammer metal all day long. He looks to be a man in his late thirties, but his grey beard and head hair suggests he could be older. The beard is scraggly, but his head hair is short and trimmed. His skin of a copper tone, tanned from spending countless hours near a fire. Wearing worn calf-high boots, patched-up pants, a leather apron and a bandanna across his head.

History: Bertie grew-up in a middle income home and would follow in his father's footsteps of becoming a blacksmith. His father, wanted him well educated and sent him off to attend a school for higher learning. Upon his return, his father taught him the meaning of a hard days work. Eventually some of his family perished while others moved away. So he was left with the family home and shop. Hard times pressured him to sell the home and move his trade closer to the city. Ideally, moving his shop into the city would have meant more business, but at a cost that someone of his status could not afford.

Common Dialogue: "You can't have sunny days, without some rainy days.", "The light cannot exist without the dark.", "It could always be worse."

Likes: Meat pizza pie, tea, peppermint.

Dislikes: Vegetables, Fish, cruelty to animals.

Quests:

"Greatness from Small Beginnings"

Unlock Requirements: None

Bertie is a busy man and needs 50 wood to fuel his furnace. The player is welcome to chop trees near Bertie's house.
