GUNSHIP

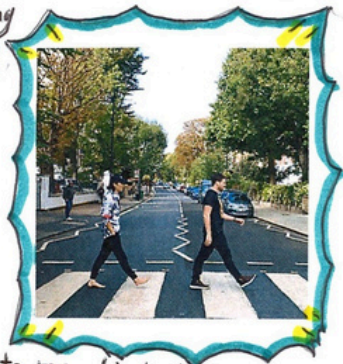

The first time I heard the band Gunship, was when they released a music video for a song called "The Mountain." I was drawn to the video because Rockstar Games had recently released a video editor for Grand Theft Auto 5. I then started exploring the rest of the band's synthwave sounds. The band is full of 80's pop culture of which include: director John Carpenter being featured on a song, 80's movie clips included in their music videos, and a song referencing characters from the movie, Ready Player One.

Gunship, as a band, feels under appreciated to me. I realize that synthwave isn't everyone's cup of tea. I suggest at least checking them out, especially if you like 80's culture.

First of October

Right now you're probably wondering "What's on October 1st?" For Rob Scallon and Andrew Huang, it's the day they drop whatever solo projects they're working on to meet at a random studio and record a 10 track album in 12 hours. Their annual release as the band "First of October" brings me joy every year. In each song, from the ridiculous (Make it Through the Night) to the more sentimental (Bottom of the Sea), it's clear to me that "First of October" is really just 2 guys who have a lot of fun making music together. Sure it's a bit more unpolished because of the 12 hour limit, but something about the lack of precision makes it feel so human.

So what's on October 1st? My answer is nothing.

It's just an ordinary day only made special by a choice. A choice to be unserious. A choice to do something purely because "wouldn't it be cool..."

Anyway First of October

makes really fun

music. You should check them

out.
